

Mount Barker Kuhmo Tyre Building Wash and Signage Removal

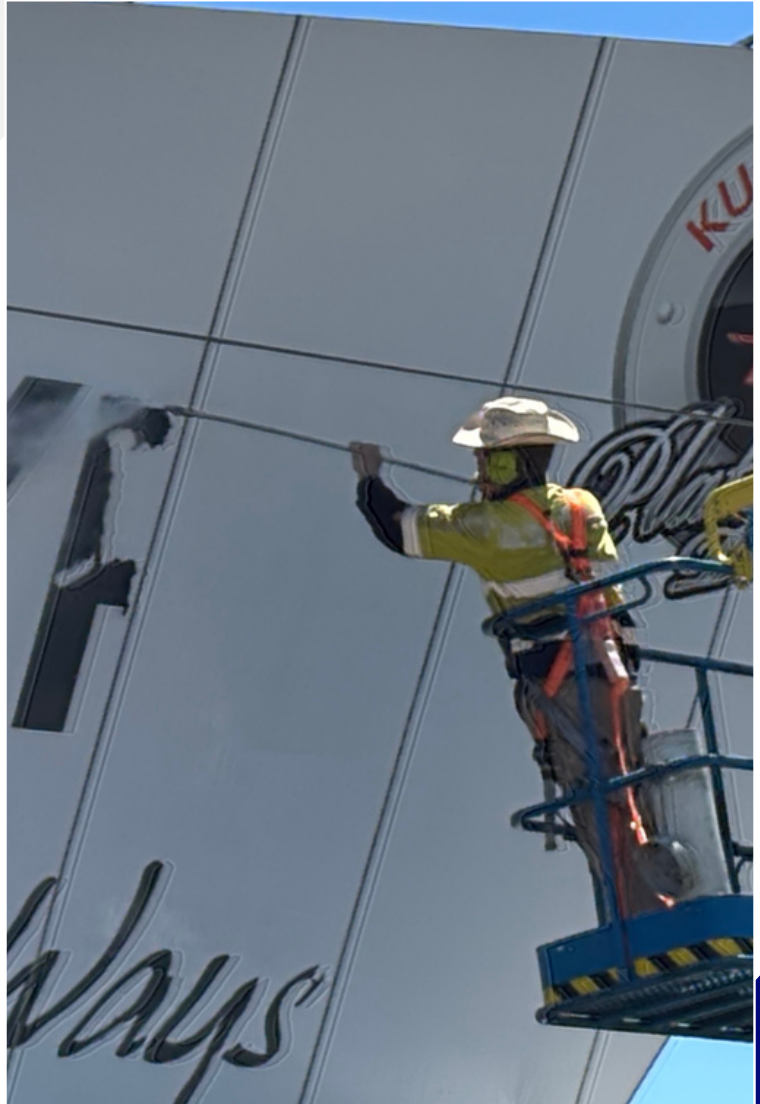

Preparing the building for a fresh new look.

OBJECTIVES

Kuhmo Tyre in Mount Barker were ready for a fresh look with new signage. Before that could happen, the old signage needed to be removed and the building washed to remove years of built-up dirt.

The objective was to clean the building façade and prepare the surface for the new signage.

SOLUTIONS

The job presented a few water and height access challenges, but that didn't faze the Roof to Floor Maintenance team. They created a plan to account for working at heights and address limited water supply. With the gracious cooperation of the neighbouring business, the team accessed water from their property to keep the job on schedule.

The signage removal was also trickier than expected due to the age and adhesion of the vinyl signage, which had bonded tightly to the surface over time. Care was taken not to damage the façade.

AT A GLANCE

CHALLENGES

- Height and water access challenges
- Water from neighbouring business was required to ensure the job ran smoothly and to plan
- Adhesive signage removal was tricky due to age of signage and length of time it was in place

BENEFITS

- Clean building façade
- Residue-free surface, ready for new signage
- Improved property presentation
- Reduced long-term surface wear through removal of adhesive and grime

BENEFITS

Clean building façade

People often form their first impression of a business from the outside. Their first impressions shape their perception of the company.

The building wash removed layers of dirt and restored the property's professional look.

Residue-free surface

Removal of the vinyl lettering and residual adhesive created a smooth, clean surface to ensure the new signage adheres better and lasts longer.

This preparation prevents bubbling or peeling and reduces future maintenance costs.

Improved property presentation

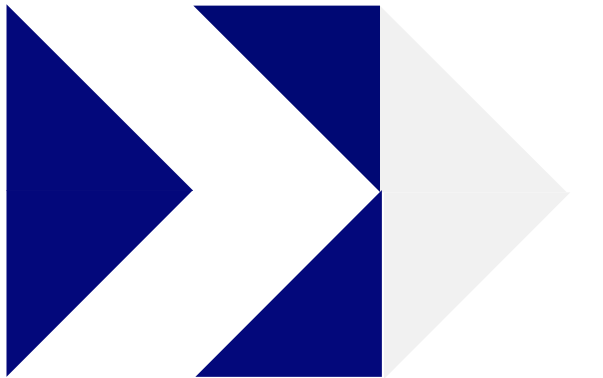

The building wash immediately lifted the site's visual appeal. A well-presented property helps attract customers, strengthens brand perception, and creates a positive first impression.

Reduced long-term surface wear

Removal of the old adhesive, dirt and environmental buildup helps to protect the building from premature ageing and damage.

Proactive maintenance reduces future repairs and can save money.
